Sites of interest

Dix Pit lake is a Local Wildlife Site and is important because of the lack of disturbance, the presence of shallow areas and islands and is particularly good for terns, ducks, grebes and gulls.

Archeological digs here between 1990 and 1999 resulted in approximately 1500 bones and teeth from large animals being excavated. The remains belonged to a range of species including mammoth, elephant, horse, bear and lion.

Devil's Quoits

4000 to 5000 years ago, this would have been one of the most important standing stone circle sites in Britain but by the end of the 19th century only three of the stones were standing. The henge earthwork was rebuilt in 2002, and in 2005 some of the original stones were moved back into position and new stones were erected to replace lost ones.

Ducklington sits on the bank of the River Windrush. The village is renowned for the Snake's Head Fritillary, a rare wildflower that grows locally. In April, the village celebrates Fritillary Sunday, when the fritillary field is open to the public.

Witney Lake and Country Park offers a gateway to the Lower Windrush Valley. There are surfaced paths round the lake and rougher paths through fields providing a rich variety of walking experiences on the doorstep of the historic market town of Witney.

Witney Lake

Stanton Harcourt

Stanton Harcourt is a small, pretty village dating from the Bronze Age. Rich in history, the village has been a focus for archaeologists for many years including the Channel 4 programme 'Time Team'. Stanton Harcourt Manor House is well-known for its 14th century medieval kitchens - the most complete surviving medieval kitchens in the country. In the grounds of the manor house is the 15th century Pope's Tower in which the poet Alexander Pope worked on his translation of Homer's Iliad.

Gill Mill Quarry, near Ducklington, is one of Oxfordshire's largest quarries. Gravel extraction will be continuing for many years and will extend to the A40 at Witney. Once extraction is completed new sites for nature conservation and recreation will be created. There will be extensive areas of new habitats, including reedbed and lowland meadow, and a network of new paths and bridleways for people to enjoy.

Tar Lakes

Tar Lakes consists of multiple lakes and ponds created as part of the restoration work that occurred after gravel extraction. The wildlife interest includes swans and great crested grebes on the water all year round, dragon and damselflies in the summer, and flocks of fieldfare in the winter.

The paths around Tar Lakes are open to everyone for walking and quiet recreation. About 800 metres of path is suitable for disabled access and pushchairs. The car park across the road at Rushy Common has space for approximately 20 cars and is open at all times. Cycle racks are available in the car park for those arriving by bicycle.

Bird Hides

The Lower Windrush Valley has some fantastic spots for birdwatching, including Rushy Common and Standlake Common Nature Reserves. Bird hides at both sites can be accessed by key, which is available to purchase from the Lower Windrush Valley Project.

Standlake Common Nature Reserve

Standlake Common is a well-established nature reserve. Over one hundred and fifty bird species have been recorded so far as well as toads, grass snakes, roe and muntjac deer plus bees, butterflies and other insects. Surveys of the aquatic life in the lake show that the water quality is good, and supports many plants, fish and invertebrates. In order to avoid disturbing the resident wildlife, the reserve has been carefully designed to allow visitors to view the whole site from two hides. The Langley's Lane hide is accessible to wheelchair users, with limited parking for blue badge holders directly next to the hide.

Rushy Common Nature Reserve

Restoration of this site after mineral extraction was carefully planned to create a diverse range of habitats including standing open water, ponds, ditches, islands, and gravelly shorelines. Winter numbers of waterfowl such as wigeon and teal can be in the hundreds and in the summer breeding common tern swoop across the water and great crested grebe carry their stripy chicks on their backs. The bird hide on the southern shore and the bird viewing screen to the west offer good views across the site. The hide is accessible to wheelchair users from the car park.

Please note that both Rushy Common and Standlake Common Nature Reserves are intended as wildlife havens and public access is not permitted, except by key holders visiting the hides.

The Lower Windrush Valley covers 28km² of West Oxfordshire incorporating the floodplain of the River Windrush from Witney to the River Thames at Newbridge. Over the last 60 years the landscape of the valley has been extensively modified by mineral extraction with large areas of the riverside pasture transformed into a mosaic of open water.

The Lower Windrush Valley Project works closely with mineral operators, landowners and the community to co-ordinate, implement and help manage a wide range of landscape, biodiversity and public access initiatives throughout the valley.

Much of the valley is in private ownership but a network of footpaths and bridleways gives access to walks beside rivers, lakes and lowland meadows.
